Guidelines for visitors to St Helena

Welcome to St Helena!

There are strict controls on what you can bring in to St Helena.

Why do these controls exist?

As a remote oceanic island, St Helena is very vulnerable to the harmful impacts of introduced pests, weeds and diseases. In order to protect the Island please note the following restrictions on the personal effects you can bring in.

It is against the law to import honey. Honey isn't processed and so can carry bee diseases such as American foul brood, as can many other unrefined bee related products and used bee equipment. St Helena has no bee diseases and local bee keepers are trying to develop honey production.

Fresh produce, plants and uncertified seeds can carry diseases and pests which could affect our crops or native plants. Because of this you need a licence to bring in fresh fruit, vegetables, and plants. Only seeds commercially produced and packaged are allowed (seeds collected from the garden are prohibited).

Foods, such as muesli, nuts, herbs and spices, can be brought in as long as they are from a commercial source (such as a supermarket) and in unopened packets.

Honey and fresh fruit brought in from the ship, yachts and plane are prohibited.

In addition, boots and hiking or camping equipment can bring in weed seeds, insects or spiders which can damage the islands agriculture or native plants and animals. Please make sure that all equipment is thoroughly cleaned before landing.

All goods and personal effects entering St Helena are inspected by Customs and Biosecurity on arrival using a combination of detector dogs, x-ray machines and visual checks. If you have brought in such goods you must hand them in, or place them in the quarantine bin on arrival. If in doubt declare it to Customs.

This leaflet gives examples of the commoner restricted goods.
